Question ID:- 135

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Mirajkar and I got down from the car to walk towards two dimly-lit shops that sold tender coconuts and tea. Mirajkar said, 'It'd have been terrible if the car had broken down in the forest. Look, how dark it is already ! I nodded in agreement, while Ramakanta paced up and down and in and out of the small roadside shops making enquiries about a garage.

All of a sudden a scrawny figure came out of a shop a little further down the National Highway. He held a kerosene lamp in his hand and wore a loose kurta and a dhoti that stopped at his knee. I couldn't make out if he wore slippers. He came up to our car and stopped. He looked old and feeble. Raising his lantern, he said, 'You have a breakdown? The workshop is seven miles away. Wait, I'll stop a car for you. The driver can go and fetch a mechanic, while you will sit in my shop and have a cup of hot tea---- may be some betel-nuts too?'

He stood right in the middle of the road swinging his lantern, his hairnet loose on his shoulders. In the flickering light, he looked spectral.

Question ID:- 149

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Lata stood outside the hall for a minute. Sunlight poured onto the stone steps. The edge of her middle finger was smeared with dark blue ink, and she looked at it, frowning. She was close to tears.

Other English students stood on the steps and chatted. A post-mortem of the paper was being held, and it was dominated by an optimistic and chubby girl who was ticking off on her fingers the various points she had answered correctly.

'This is one paper I know I have done really well,' she said. 'Especially the 'King Lear' question. I think that the answer was 'yes'. Others were looking excited or depressed. Everyone agreed that several of the questions were far harder than they had needed to be. A knot of history students stood not far away, discussing their paper, which had been held simultaneously in the same building. one of them was the young man who had brought himself to Lata's attention in the Imperial Book Depot, and he was looking a little worried. He had spent a great deal of time these last few months in extra-curricular activities---particularly cricket-- and this had taken its toll upon his performance.

Lata walked to a bench beneath the gulmohar tree and sat down to collect herself. When she got home for lunch, she would be pestered with a hundred questions about how well she had done. She looked down at the red flowers that lay scattered at her feet. In her head, she could still hear the buzzing of fly.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

My world was circumscribed by the boundaries of our house in Vinayak Street and peopled by Uncle and Aunt mainly. I had no existence separately from my uncle. I clung to him all through the day. Mornings in the garden at the backyard, afternoons inside, and all evening on the front pyol of the house squatting beside him. When he prayed or meditated at midday, I sat in front of him watching his face and imitating him. When he saw me mutter imaginary prayers with my eyes shut, he became ecstatic and cried aloud to my aunt in the kitchen, 'See this fellow, how well he prays! We must teach him some slokas. No doubt whatever, he is going to be a saint someday. What do you think?' When he prostrated to the gods in the puja room, I too threw myself on the floor, encouraged by the compliments showered on me. He would stand staring at me until Aunt reminded him that his lunch was ready. When he sat down to eat, I nestled close to him, pressing my elbow on his lap. Aunt would say, 'Move off' little man. Let uncle eat in peace; but he always countermanded her and said, 'Stay, stay'. After lunch he chewed betel leaves and areca nut, moved on to his bedroom, and stretched himself on his rosewood bench, with a small pillow under his head. Just when he fell into a doze, I demanded, 'Tell me a story,' butting him with my elbow.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Mirajkar and I got down from the car to walk towards two dimly-lit shops that sold tender coconuts and tea. Mirajkar said, 'It'd have been terrible if the car had broken down in the forest. Look, how dark it is already ! I nodded in agreement, while Ramakanta paced up and down and in and out of the small roadside shops making enquiries about a garage.

All of a sudden a scrawny figure came out of a shop a little further down the National Highway. He held a kerosene lamp in his hand and wore a loose kurta and a dhoti that stopped at his knee. I couldn't make out if he wore slippers. He came up to our car and stopped. He looked old and feeble. Raising his lantern, he said, 'You have a breakdown? The workshop is seven miles away. Wait, I'll stop a car for you. The driver can go and fetch a mechanic, while you will sit in my shop and have a cup of hot tea---- may be some betel-nuts too?'

He stood right in the middle of the road swinging his lantern, his hairnet loose on his shoulders. In the flickering light, he looked spectral.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Lata stood outside the hall for a minute. Sunlight poured onto the stone steps. The edge of her middle finger was smeared with dark blue ink, and she looked at it, frowning. She was close to tears.

Other English students stood on the steps and chatted. A post-mortem of the paper was being held, and it was dominated by an optimistic and chubby girl who was ticking off on her fingers the various points she had answered correctly.

'This is one paper I know I have done really well,' she said. 'Especially the 'King Lear' question. I think that the answer was 'yes'. Others were looking excited or depressed. Everyone agreed that several of the questions were far harder than they had needed to be. A knot of history students stood not far away, discussing their paper, which had been held simultaneously in the same building. one of them was the young man who had brought himself to Lata's attention in the Imperial Book Depot, and he was looking a little worried. He had spent a great deal of time these last few months in extra-curricular activities---particularly cricket-- and this had taken its toll upon his performance.

Lata walked to a bench beneath the gulmohar tree and sat down to collect herself. When she got home for lunch, she would be pestered with a hundred questions about how well she had done. She looked down at the red flowers that lay scattered at her feet. In her head, she could still hear the buzzing of fly.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

My world was circumscribed by the boundaries of our house in Vinayak Street and peopled by Uncle and Aunt mainly. I had no existence separately from my uncle. I clung to him all through the day. Mornings in the garden at the backyard, afternoons inside, and all evening on the front pyol of the house squatting beside him. When he prayed or meditated at midday, I sat in front of him watching his face and imitating him. When he saw me mutter imaginary prayers with my eyes shut, he became ecstatic and cried aloud to my aunt in the kitchen, 'See this fellow, how well he prays! We must teach him some slokas. No doubt whatever, he is going to be a saint someday. What do you think?' When he prostrated to the gods in the puja room, I too threw myself on the floor, encouraged by the compliments showered on me. He would stand staring at me until Aunt reminded him that his lunch was ready. When he sat down to eat, I nestled close to him, pressing my elbow on his lap. Aunt would say, 'Move off' little man. Let uncle eat in peace; but he always countermanded her and said, 'Stay, stay'. After lunch he chewed betel leaves and areca nut, moved on to his bedroom, and stretched himself on his rosewood bench, with a small pillow under his head. Just when he fell into a doze, I demanded, 'Tell me a story,' butting him with my elbow.

Question ID:- 140

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

My world was circumscribed by the boundaries of our house in Vinayak Street and peopled by Uncle and Aunt mainly. I had no existence separately from my uncle. I clung to him all through the day. Mornings in the garden at the backyard, afternoons inside, and all evening on the front porch of the house squatting beside him. When he prayed or meditated at midday, I sat in front of him watching his face and imitating him. When he saw me mutter imaginary prayers with my eyes shut, he became ecstatic and cried aloud to my aunt in the kitchen, 'See this fellow, how well he prays! We must teach him some slokas. No doubt whatever, he is going to be a saint someday. What do you think?' When he prostrated to the gods in the puja room, I too threw myself on the floor, encouraged by the compliments showered on me. He would stand staring at me until Aunt reminded him that his lunch was ready. When he sat down to eat, I nestled close to him, pressing my elbow on his lap. Aunt would say, 'Move off' little man. Let uncle eat in peace; but he always countermanded her and said, 'Stay, stay'. After lunch he chewed betel leaves and areca nut, moved on to his bedroom, and stretched himself on his rosewood bench, with a small pillow under his head. Just when he fell into a doze, I demanded, 'Tell me a story,' butting him with my elbow.

What was the Uncle's reaction when he saw the narrator muttering imaginary prayers ?

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Lata stood outside the hall for a minute. Sunlight poured onto the stone steps. The edge of her middle finger was smeared with dark blue ink, and she looked at it, frowning. She was close to tears.

Other English students stood on the steps and chatted. A post-mortem of the paper was being held, and it was dominated by an optimistic and chubby girl who was ticking off on her fingers the various points she had answered correctly.

'This is one paper I know I have done really well,' she said. 'Especially the 'King Lear' question. I think that the answer was 'yes'. Others were looking excited or depressed. Everyone agreed that several of the questions were far harder than they had needed to be. A knot of history students stood not far away, discussing their paper, which had been held simultaneously in the same building. one of them was the young man who had brought himself to Lata's attention in the Imperial Book Depot, and he was looking a little worried. He had spent a great deal of time these last few months in extra-curricular activities---particularly cricket-- and this had taken its toll upon his performance.

Lata walked to a bench beneath the gulmohar tree and sat down to collect herself. When she got home for lunch, she would be pestered with a hundred questions about how well she had done. She looked down at the red flowers that lay scattered at her feet. In her head, she could still hear the buzzing of fly.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Mirajkar and I got down from the car to walk towards two dimly-lit shops that sold tender coconuts and tea. Mirajkar said, 'It'd have been terrible if the car had broken down in the forest. Look, how dark it is already ! I nodded in agreement, while Ramakanta paced up and down and in and out of the small roadside shops making enquiries about a garage.

All of a sudden a scrawny figure came out of a shop a little further down the National Highway. He held a kerosene lamp in his hand and wore a loose kurta and a dhoti that stopped at his knee. I couldn't make out if he wore slippers. He came up to our car and stopped. He looked old and feeble. Raising his lantern, he said, 'You have a breakdown? The workshop is seven miles away. Wait, I'll stop a car for you. The driver can go and fetch a mechanic, while you will sit in my shop and have a cup of hot tea---- may be some betel-nuts too?'

He stood right in the middle of the road swinging his lantern, his hairnet loose on his shoulders. In the flickering light, he looked spectral.

What was the old man's response on finding the car damaged ?

- (1) He offered to repair the damaged car.
- (2) He remained indifferent to the plight of the stranded passengers.
- (3) He proposed to get a mechanic to repair the car.
- (4) He asked the stranded passengers to spend the night there.

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow.

Mirajkar and I got down from the car to walk towards two dimly-lit shops that sold tender coconuts and tea. Mirajkar said, 'It'd have been terrible if the car had broken down in the forest. Look, how dark it is already ! I nodded in agreement, while Ramakanta paced up and down and in and out of the small roadside shops making enquiries about a garage.

All of a sudden a scrawny figure came out of a shop a little further down the National Highway. He held a kerosene lamp in his hand and wore a loose kurta and a dhoti that stopped at his knee. I couldn't make out if he wore slippers. He came up to our car and stopped. He looked old and feeble. Raising his lantern, he said, 'You have a breakdown? The workshop is seven miles away. Wait, I'll stop a car for you. The driver can go and fetch a mechanic, while you will sit in my shop and have a cup of hot tea---- may be some betel-nuts too?'

He stood right in the middle of the road swinging his lantern, his hairnet loose on his shoulders. In the flickering light, he looked spectral.

Question ID:- 452

Study the passage given below and answer the question that follow :

We cannot say in what part of the world man first came into existence, nor do we know where the first human settlements were. Perhaps men came into existence in several parts at more or less the same time. It is likely, however, that when the great glaciers of the Ice Age were melting away and going back towards the north, men lived in the warmer regions. When the ice went, there must have been vast Steppes, or something like the Tundras which we have in Siberia now. These must have become grasslands, and men must have wandered about them as they wanted grain for their cattle. These people who have no fixed place to live in and are always wandering about are called 'nomads'. Even now, we have some nomads in many countries, including India, like the gypsies.

Human race came into existence _____ .

- (1) in the African continent
- (2) in the Arctic region
- (3) at many places roughly at the same time
- (4) in the Asian sub-continent

Question ID:- 469

निम्नलिखित गद्यांश को ध्यानपूर्वक पढ़िए और उसके आधार पर दिए गए प्रश्न का उत्तर दीजिए :

प्रेम का कारण बहुत कुछ अनिर्दिष्ट और अज्ञात होता है; पर श्रद्धा का कारण निर्दिष्ट और ज्ञात होता है। कभी-कभी केवल एक साथ रहते-रहते दो प्राणियों में यह भाव उत्पन्न हो जाता है कि वे बराबर साथ रहें; उनका साथ कभी न छूटे। प्रेमी प्रिय के संपूर्ण जीवन - क्रम के सतत साक्षात्कार का अभिलाषी होता है। वह उसका उठना, बैठना, चलना-फिरना, सोना, खाना-पीना सब कुछ देखना चाहता है। संसार में बहुत से लोग उठते-बैठते, चलते-फिरते हैं, पर सबका उठना-बैठना, चलना-फिरना उसको वैसा अच्छा नहीं लगता। प्रेमी प्रिय के जीवन को अपने जीवन से मिलाकर एक निराला मिश्रण तैयार करना चाहता है। वह दो से एक करना चाहता है। सारांश यह है कि श्रद्धा में दृष्टि पहले कर्मों पर से होती हुई श्रद्धेय तक पहुँचती है और प्रीति में प्रिय पर से होती हुई उसके कर्मों आदि पर आ जाती है। एक में व्यक्ति को कर्मों द्वारा मनोहरता प्राप्त होती है, दूसरी में कर्मों को व्यक्ति-द्वारा। एक में कर्म प्रधान है, दूसरी में व्यक्ति।
